SPOKANE, WASHINGTON

An organizer for the Central America Peace Campaign said Sunday all is not well in Central America.

Jamie Donaldson said she was politically naive when she went to Central America as an archeologist in 1975.

But her five years there changed her forever.

She urged the audience to contact their representatives and ask that the U.S. stop supporting the CIA backed 'Contra' forces in Nicaragua.

She said the U.S. should also stop sending military aid to El Salvador and instead support negotiations between the different fighting groups.

She warned that in Honduras, the poorest of all the Central American countries, the U.S. should dismantle its bases and get out before it is drawn into a Vietnam-like war there.
